

At the King's Command

Susan Wiggs

To be published by Mira February 2010 $32.99

The intrigue and majesty of King Henry VIII's court is brought to vivid life in the first of the Tudor Rose trilogy by #1 New York Times bestseller, Susan Wiggs.

In At the King's Command, an insolent nobleman is forced to choose between marrying a thief who attempted to steal the King's horse or watching her hang. The choice sees cold and bitter widower Stephen de Lacey marry Juliana Romanov, a Russian princess forced into hiding by a traitorous cabal who slaughtered her family.

Though at once dismissing her as utterly inconvenient, Stephen can't deny that Juliana is undeniably fetching, and as she plots her revenge and return to Muscovy to avenge her family, their farcical marriage blossoms into the deepest love.

ABOUT SUSAN WIGGS

Susan first started writing in Texas USA at age eight, a tome called A Book About Some Bad Kids, then left her budding writing career to focus on degrees and to teach maths. Picking up writing again after finding herself with nothing to read, Susan has since been awarded three RITAs and her books regularly appear on 'best of' lists. She also teaches writing workshops and is a speaker at writing conferences.
